

New York can't build universal child care on poverty wages.

The State is expanding child care faster than ever. The providers who make it possible earn less than 96% of New York workers, and they are leaving the field. Our ask: fund the workforce and fund the families in the 2027 budget.

$1.8B

A wage scale for child care workers

Fund the CUNY-PDI / Workforce Collaborative scale (role, credentials, experience; parity with K-12) for every provider, in centers and homes, without raising what families pay or interfering with collective bargaining.

$1.04B

CCAP for every eligible family

$400M statewide plus $640M for New York City in recurring funding, so no eligible family is waitlisted or turned away, and providers get fair, reliable income.

The need

$37,675
median child care educator pay; less than 96% of NY jobs

$6.01
median hourly take-home for NYC home-based providers

57%
of NY programs short-staffed; 16,000+ kids unserved

- Family child care capacity fell 28% from 2019 to 2024; 60% of census tracts are child care deserts.
- In May 2026, 31 counties and NYC had stopped enrolling eligible families in CCAP for lack of funds. NYC's waitlist hit ~30,000 children.
- The FY27 budget added $1.2B for CCAP but nothing for wages.

The principles from NYCAT

1. A statewide wage scale and career ladder, indexed to cost of living.
2. Pay subsidies and CCAP rates based on the true cost of care.
3. Worker voice: sectoral bargaining, a wage board, labor peace.
4. A phase-in backed by dedicated progressive revenue.

What the wage scale means

PROVIDER	NOW	SCALE
NYC family child care, HS diploma, 21 yrs	$33,280	$79,184
NYC teacher, associate degree, 3 yrs	$40,000	$69,836
Buffalo family child care, HS diploma, 11 yrs	$33,280	$53,792
Rochester center director, BA + credential, 6 yrs	$52,000	$76,022

New York can pay for it

The Fiscal Policy Institute shows a progressive package (a small payroll tax, a corporate surcharge, and a 1% NYC tax on income over $1M) raises about $8B a year, enough for statewide universal care with providers earning $50,000 to $60,000.
